Person: Henry McNeal Turner - Historical Illustration - Started serving as chaplain in Nov 1863

REV. H. M. TURNER, CHAPLAIN FIRST UNITED STATES COLORED REGIMENT.

Title: Serving during the Civil War

Description: In 1863, Henry McNeal Turner helped organize the First Regiment of United States Colored Troops and served as its chaplain. After the war, he became a Georgia state legislator during Reconstruction and a bishop in the African Methodist Episcopal Church. His work combined religious leadership with the fight for Black political rights.

Why it belongs here: Turner's life reminds visitors that the struggle for equality began generations before the modern Civil Rights Movement. His burial at South-View connects the cemetery to the Civil War and Reconstruction, when formerly enslaved people were working to build new lives and claim political rights.

Historical background:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/arts-culture/henry-mcneal-turner-1834-1915

Proof of connection to South View:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/arts-culture/black-cemeteries

Original historical illustration: https://www.loc.gov/item/2009630222

---

Person: Robert Grant - Historical Portrait - helped establish South-View cemetery in 1886 (portrait's original date and reproduction permission still need verification)

Title: Helping establish South-View

Description: Robert Grant was a Black businessman, blacksmith, and religious leader in Atlanta. He helped establish South-View Cemetery in 1886, when Black Atlantans faced discrimination in burial practices. Grant also played an important role in the founding of Zion Hill Baptist Church.

Why it belongs here: At a time when Black Atlantans faced discrimination even in death, Grant helped create a place where families could bury their loved ones with dignity. South-View's continued existence reflects the efforts of its founders to provide for their community.

Historical background: https://www.zionhill.org/historyarchive

Proof of connection to South View:
https://www.southviewpreservation.com/historyintheneighborhood

Original historical illustration: https://www.zionhill.org/historyarchive

---

Person: Alonzo Herndon - Historical Photograph - started his insurance business in 1905 (photograph dates to approx. 1900)

Title: Building a business during segregation

Description: Born into slavery in 1858, Alonzo Herndon became a successful Atlanta businessman. In 1905, he purchased a mutual aid association that eventually grew into Atlanta Life Insurance Company. He also supported community institutions, including the Southview Cemetery Association.

Why it belongs here: Herndon built successful businesses despite the racial barriers facing Black Atlantans. His support for the Southview Cemetery Association shows how his achievements also benefited local institutions. His story connects business success with investment in the community.

Historical background:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/business-economy/alonzo-herndon-1858-1927

Proof of connection to South-View:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/business-economy/alonzo-herndon-1858-1927

Original historical portrait: dlg.usg.edu/record/auu_auc-001_auc-001-1139

---

Person: Ludie Clay Andrews - Historical Photograph - became Georgia’s first Black registered nurse in 1920 (photograph date N/A currently)

Title: Opening doors for Black nurses

Description: Ludie Clay Andrews helped organize the Grady Municipal Training School for Colored Nurses in 1914. She challenged restrictions that prevented Black nurses from obtaining state registration and became Georgia's first Black registered nurse in 1920. Her work helped expand professional opportunities for Black women in healthcare.

Why it belongs here: Andrews challenged barriers that kept qualified Black nurses from receiving professional recognition. Her efforts helped future generations of nurses pursue careers in healthcare. She is buried at South-View, connecting the cemetery to an important chapter in Georgia's nursing history.

Historical background: https://www.georgiawomen.org/ludie-clay-andrews

Proof of connection to South-View:
https://leading-edge.iac.gatech.edu/building-memories/southview-cemetery
https://www.georgiawomen.org/ludie-clay-andrews

Original historical portrait: https://www.georgiawomen.org/ludie-clay-andrews

---

Person: John Wesley Dobbs - Historical Interview - Interview conducted on Dec 2, 1939, by Geneva Tensill.

Title: A voice for political change

Description: John Wesley Dobbs worked to increase Black political participation in Atlanta during segregation. He led the Atlanta Civic and Political League in the 1930s, encouraging greater community involvement in politics. In a 1939 interview, he shared his experiences growing up and becoming a community leader.

Why it belongs here: Decades before the major Civil Rights marches, Dobbs was helping Black Atlantans build political influence. His story shows how earlier generations laid the groundwork for the struggle for voting rights. His burial at South-View connects the cemetery to this history of local organizing.

Historical background:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/history-archaeology/john-wesley-dobbs-1882-1961

Proof of connection to South-View:
https://leading-edge.iac.gatech.edu/building-memories/southview-cemetery

Original historical portrait:
https://www.georgiaencyclopedia.org/articles/history-archaeology/john-wesley-dobbs-1882-1961